I just read Kevin's e-mail, and perhaps Sarah should be sending this. She, and the rest of you, probably remember this better than I do. But here goes:

The future of the Faculty Development Program was discussed on Friday, Oct. 5. Many ideas were bounced around, with the following standing out (at least in my mind--

Faculty Development could be a tool to assist faculty in understanding and aiding the University with important issues such as the HLC visit in the spring, the SGID tool and how it should work.

I will endeavor to send reminders of important dates, committee meetings, etc. We should all mark our calendars to attend committee meetings after each workshop.

The winter social is enjoyed by a large number of faculty and will continue, with perhaps a social in the spring as well.

Monthly workshops tend to be a drain on the committee, and attendance is difficult to maintain because so many areas are now holding meetings on Friday afternoons. The possibility of moving to one or two workshops a semester was discussed.

The Nov. workshop and Dec. social will continue as planned. February will be the "Cecil Shows His Wiki" workshop, with March being SGID "training" utilizing a taped SGID by Donna, with questions for the attendees to follow. April will be a discussion of the University Self Study, as a Social event.

Please let me know what I have gotten wrong and/or left out.
