KANSAS STUDIES

Kansas Day
Presentation

John W. Carlin

Kansas Governor, 1979-87, and Executive-in-Residence, Political Science, Kansas State University

Carlin's service as an Archivist of the United States for the National Archives and Records Administration from 1995 to 2005, and as chair of the National Historical Publications and Records Commission during the same time period, provide him with the historical perspective needed to evaluate Kansas at its sesquicentennial.

“KANSAS at 150:

What Looking at the Past Can Tell
Us about Moving Forward”

3:30 PM Friday, January 28

Henderson Hall, Rm. 208

Washburn University

This presentation is free and open to the public. Refreshments will be served.

The Center for Kansas Studies at Washburn University encourages the study of the history and culture of the state as a matter of gaining insight into oneself as a product of those forces. The Fellows of the Center are those Washburn faculty who offer courses which focus on the state and who benefit from the interdisciplinary exchange of ideas and resources.
