

Hi, my name is Nilam Dangi and I am a Business student majoring in Data Analytics and Finance with a minor in Mathematics. Born and brought up in a country famous for “unity in diversity”, Nepal, I always wanted to explore and study in a more diverse environment which made me come to the United States which is famous for quality education and as a diverse society and as per my requirements, I ended up being here at Washburn. With fun-loving personality, I love strolling around in nature, traveling, and exploring, and definitely trying out different sorts of cuisines. Despite being a bit timid, I am always enthusiastic about making new friends and considerate in helping people so if you have any problem, don't feel hesitant to reach out to me. One advice that I would like to give to incoming students is to grab the opportunities that come in your way and engage yourself in extra-curricular activities apart from studies to remain distinct in this competitive era and obviously, enjoy whatever endeavor you take. “The more open you are to new things, the more experience you will gain, the more confident and enhanced you will find yourself to be” is what I have learned so far.
